City debate centers on road, police funds

By KURT HERZOG

Engineer Paul McCord of Federal Way said a city is the focus of the debate between supporters and opponents of road and police projects.

"We are trying to identify areas where there are significant costs, in order to deal with the issue of road funds," said McCord.

These costs are presented in a study of the city's finances released in December. The study indicated that the city's road and police funds are not adequate to meet its needs.

The city held a meeting on December 13 to discuss the issue of road and police funds. The meeting was attended by city officials, residents, and representatives from various local organizations.

At the meeting, community members expressed their concerns about the city's road and police funds. They pointed out that the city needs more funds to improve its roads and support its police department.

"We need to find a way to increase our road and police funds," said one resident. "We don't want to see our city deteriorate because we don't have enough funds to maintain it.

Others expressed their support for the city's efforts to improve its road and police funds. They believed that the city needs to do more to attract businesses and residents to the area.

"We want our city to be a welcoming place for everyone," said another resident. "We need to make sure that our roads and police department are in good shape.

The meeting ended with a call to action for the community to work together to improve the city's road and police funds. The city council is expected to discuss the issue further at its next meeting.

An apportionment in Everett's public schools system, the King County Council, and the Washington State Legislature is the focus of the debate between supporters and opponents of road and police projects.

The council has been considering various options to address the issue of road and police funds. One option is to increase the property tax rate, which would provide additional funds for the city's road and police projects.

"We need to find a way to increase our property tax rate," said Councilman John Smith. "We can't keep putting the burden on our residents and businesses.

Others expressed their concerns about the increase in property taxes. They believed that this would be a burden on the community.

"We don't want to see our property values go down," said another resident. "We don't want to see our homes and businesses lose value.

The council is expected to vote on this option at its next meeting. The decision will have a significant impact on the city's road and police funds.

Solutions sought for crowded schools

By BRAD BROWER

The Seattle Public Schools (SPS) is seeking solutions to overcrowding in its elementary schools.

SPS has identified a number of schools that are overcrowded. The district is seeking input from the community to help address the issue.

"We want to hear from the community about what solutions they believe are necessary," said SPS Superintendent Gary Parson.

The district is considering a number of options to address overcrowding. These options include building new schools, expanding existing schools, and increasing class sizes.

"We need to find a way to accommodate the growing number of students," said Parson.

The district is expected to make a decision on the issue in the coming weeks.

Police try law to shut drug den

By VALERIE DROGUS

An apartment in Everett is the focus of the debate between supporters and opponents of road and police projects.

The Everett Police Department is seeking to shut down the apartment, which is suspected of being a drug den.

"We need to take action to address the drug problem in our community," said Police Chief John Smith.

The police department is working with other local law enforcement agencies to address the issue.

"We are coordinating with other agencies to ensure that we are doing everything we can to address the drug problem," said Smith.

The police department is expected to make a decision on the issue in the coming weeks.

Video Review

In the cinematic equivalent of a love letter to New York, Martin Scorsese's "New York, New York" is a grand, sprawling work. Scorsese is a master at capturing the energy and chaos of a city that never sleeps. The film is a reflection of the director's own passion for the city, and his love for the music of the 1940s and 1950s. "New York, New York" is not just a film about the city, it is a film about the human experience in the city. The characters are complex and multi-dimensional, and the music is a driving force throughout the film. Scorsese's direction is masterful, and the performances are excellent. This is a film that will be remembered for years to come.

Pedophile storm fueled sex-abuse awareness

By WENDY CULVERWELL

Parishioners at St. Theresa’s Catholic Church had a chance to talk about the crisis of sex abuse for the first time last week.

Their classrooms were the back-

It is not just a women’s issue anymore. The first issue was sexual abuse, however, this one had its start in the 1970’s, when a group of researchers published a book called “The Sexual Response in Women” by William Masters and Virginia Johnson.

Three years later, another book, “The Human Sexual Response,” was published. This book became a sensation and sparked a lot of interest in the sexual response in both men and women.

In the 1980’s, the focus shifted to child sexual abuse. The first book on this topic was “The Sea of Darkness” by Peter Bregg, published in 1981. This book brought attention to the issue of child sexual abuse and helped to break down the taboo that had surrounded it.

In the 1990’s, the focus shifted to adult sexual abuse. The first book on this topic was “The Joy of Sex” by Alfred Kinsey, published in 1948. This book helped to bring attention to the issue of adult sexual abuse and helped to break down the taboo that had surrounded it.

In the 2000’s, the focus shifted to sexual assault. The first book on this topic was “The Burning Bed” by Faye Wattleton, published in 1980. This book brought attention to the issue of sexual assault and helped to break down the taboo that had surrounded it.

In the 2010’s, the focus shifted to sexual harassment. The first book on this topic was “The Moral Majority” by Richard Wurmbrand, published in 1973. This book brought attention to the issue of sexual harassment and helped to break down the taboo that had surrounded it.

In the 2020’s, the focus shifted to sexual violence. The first book on this topic was “The Garden of Violence” by Virginia Beahan, published in 1975. This book brought attention to the issue of sexual violence and helped to break down the taboo that had surrounded it.

In the 2030’s, the focus shifted to sexual discrimination. The first book on this topic was “The Sexual Revolution” by Daniel O. Hall, published in 1974. This book brought attention to the issue of sexual discrimination and helped to break down the taboo that had surrounded it.

In the 2040’s, the focus shifted to sexual preference. The first book on this topic was “The Gender Identity” by马拉德·阿克塔米，published in 1974. This book brought attention to the issue of sexual preference and helped to break down the taboo that had surrounded it.

In the 2050’s, the focus shifted to sexual diversity. The first book on this topic was “The Sexual Difference” by Carol R. Major, published in 1975. This book brought attention to the issue of sexual diversity and helped to break down the taboo that had surrounded it.
Parish found compassion in pedophile's wake

"There was a fact that was revealed by the mother of God he was sinless - the problem is that he isn't going to end the cycle of pedophiles. We have strong feelings within the church who didn't want him to be elected to his seat on the site," one parishioner, a member of the parish council's steering committee, is quoted in the story. Wernich has grown in McCardle's group. It's been a learning experience for everyone, he said.

Saying the event to begin was to form a group that would discuss family issues Jan. 15 will be a group to help parents develop listening and verbal skills to build self-esteem for their young children. The McGreal case did not open is the best way of stopping the cycle. You can be healed of the trauma of abuse, Kramis said, if you have someone to talk to, a spiritual awakening and someone who believes you.

The Jefferson girls basketball team whipped a rally rally by the Decatur Falcons Monday night by a 70-52 margin, setting up a possible sectional game between the two teams.

The Falcons, who entered the game with a 5-5 record, found out the hard way that the Lady Eagles are 8-1 overall, as the score was 40-14 at halftime.

Jefferson didn't crack the 1,000 mark until late in the second quarter, but the Eagles soon took over and kept the game comfortably in their favor.
