Top spellers to vie at Wednesday's bee

Spelling whizzes from 21 Federal Way elementary schools and junior highs will vie for the top honors at the Federal Way School District Spelling Bee, held Wednesday, March 8, at 7:30 p.m. in the Thomas Jefferson High School little theater.

Two students from each local elementary school and three from each of five junior highs, totaling 47 students grades 1 to 8, will spell down under the direction of a moderator and a panel of judges.

The five top spellers at the bee will continue to a written, regional spelling bee in April. Winners of the regional bee will move on to a state contest, and winners of the state bee will be the national champions.

ACHZIGER is part of a group studying the annexation of the Woodmont area to Des Moines. It's likely that at Woodmont goes, so goes Redondo, although at least a few neighborhood members specifically asked to be left out of the incorporation boundaries in everyone's last try in 1985 and again this time. On a map, Redondo is near Federal Way, but its topographic isolation, with the steep hills and surrounding water front, don't lend itself to easy decision making.

The wait-and-see period, if Federal Way incorporates, will give Redondo residents a chance to see if they believe they can best be served by a new city or by Des Moines.

"We're a long way from those governments. We're Federal Way, that's all there is to it," Hale said.

But he noted that the Camelot area is highly populated and geographically similar to the proposed incorporation area, while other areas to the southeast of the proposed area are rural, and may want to stay that way.

Donna Grossruck said her Lake Geneva neighborhood is strongly independent and wants to keep its autonomy. She has no problem with being left out of the incorporation plans except to note that the strip of unincorporated area may lose some services because of its diminished size and population.

Grossruck, who has opposed incorporation, said she does not fear a loss of existing services, such as police protection. She is afraid of what would happen if not incorporated. She does not want to see a strip of unincorporated area between the incorporated area and Federal Way.

"We'll just deal with that when it happens," said Grossruck, a member of the Federal Way Community Council.

She shares that attitude with Weyerhaeuser, which has opposed incorporation, and said she does not fear a loss of existing services, such as police protection. She is afraid of what would happen if not incorporated. She does not want to see a strip of unincorporated area between the incorporated area and Federal Way.

"We have the advanced technology with computers, refrigeration and fax, to serve the people down here," she said.

Woodmont area to Des Moines. It's not a given. It's likely that as Woodmont incorporates, will follow incorporation of Interstate 5 and the nearby cities of Kent and Auburn.

Woodmont, like other areas left out of the proposed incorporation, said she does not fear a loss of existing services, such as police protection. She has no problem with being left out of the incorporation plans except to note that the strip of unincorporated area may lose some services because of its diminished size and population.

Federal Way Community Council member Wally Costello, vice president of community development, was included in earlier incorporation proposals but resisted these offers. Weyerhaeuser headquarters was left out of the 1985 campaign and the current one when rezoned boundaries excluded everything except the headquarters.

Company spokesperson Jim Hale said Weyerhaeuser is officially neutral on incorporation. If annexation into a new city is proposed, "We would look at that question when it arises."

However, the company's subsidiary, Quadrant Corp., which owns property within the proposed boundaries in West Cam­ pus, has been slightly more com­ mitted. The corporation made a major effort to get in the 1985 campaign. But Quadrant still considers Federal Way an incorpo­ rated city and will support that if it happens. If not, "We will continue to do business with King County," Costello said.

"We are ready, willing and able to do business with a newly incorporated city and we will support that if it happens. If not, we will continue to do business with King County," Costello said.

Should incorporation fail, Grossruck said she would like to see a push for a fifth try at cityhood, but an attempt to br­ ing the county closer to Federal Way by opening a satellite office or headquarters. She also opposes "gerrymandering" city boundaries for south county residents.

"We have the advanced technology with computers, refrigeration and fax, to serve the people down here," she said.

Federal Way built up a big lead in the third quarter, only to see Kennedy come charging back. Federal Way lost it at a 6-20 West Control District girls' basketball victory.

The WCD semifinal game was originally scheduled to take place Wednesday at Clover Park, but it was rescheduled when the Lancers failed to make the trip due to poor weather conditions.

Kennedy (30-4) outscored Federal Way (25-9, 36-36 in the final quarter to erase what had been a 10-point lead.

"We didn't panic," Kennedy coach Paul Muckerheide said. "We took the ball out of state and let the big kids make their moves."

The first half was to "make the few" of becoming junior varsity players, Peterson said. The second will be last of off-season experiences.

The real key will be summer league. It's a good experience playing against them. All last week's state playoff trip was fun, elegant Peterson ad­

The Warriors will have to develop a better outside game to return to the Tacoma Dome next season. Peterson said, "We don't have the ball very well in offensive this year. We were content in throw the ball to­

to the free throw line, the big kids make their moves."

"We were not ready for our outside shots and we had to be in form," Peterson said. "But we were still confident, and avoided physical and mental lapses at times, we could have had a more successful experience."
