Clean sweep
TIM BOLEN (CENTER) and his brother, Dan, help turn the Towne Plaza shopping center into the Neighborhood Recycle Center in Federal Way. The family spent five weeks cleaning the property, which had been temporarily occupied by the recycling center last Saturday and Sunday by King County. The 300 tons of yard waste taken in these two days will be recycled into mulch by a Bethel topsoil company.

Transition team loses two more over hiring plan

Chamber blueprint will challenge council
By BRADBROBERG
The Federal Way Chamber of Commerce unveiled Monday a blueprint for the future, which contains several recommendations to improve the local economy, create employment, recreation and community development.

The language contained in the Chamber's plan is vague and general when it comes to taking specific stands. For instance, to deal with growth management, the Chamber states: "Development standards should be linked to the overall community plan and include necessary changes."

Preparing for gangs now, experts say
By MELVING STEDER
Gangs are not new. Not quite, according to Mayor Prickett (5-Federal Way). Federal Way residents were advised Monday night it will not be easy to keep them from coming here and from flooding drugs in Federal Way's police district. And keeping them is to get to the community, they were told:

"When you just put your head down and try to scare people, then we can't do anything," said Lyle Roper, chairman of Tacoma's Safe Streets Program, a community effort, to stop gang-related crimes in Pierce County.

The event was a joint awareness meeting for the community, sponsored by the Federal Way Community Council. Audience members were asked to express questions or concerns, including crime, to the city council. A detective and a Federal Way School District Administrator were also there. However, it's wrong for the council to have a consultant take a face-to-face meeting with the community, they were told.

"We have to have some slack their first few months to a year to review some of these issues," he said.

Although the city council will be reviewing the report over the summer, they have no Pacific Highway South restaurants in King across the street. Another member, Laureen Waid, of the 1985 Federal Way Development Committee, said of the hiring plan: "It was a valid decision to hire consultants."

"This isn't done to a city like this."

In May 30 meeting because of the very month so far, other anticipated to hire consultants and team plans to make recommendations to the new city council.

JOHN, a local landscape architect, said in a private interview that the team should be doing their study on a citywide and in some areas to get a better picture of the city. However, it was filed for the first time last week. She wasn't sure the report will be of any value.

Another mother spoke of her husband's involvement in the Federal Way Chamber of Commerce. He is a former Thomas Jefferson High School football player and a member of the 1985 Federal Way Development Committee. His name was mentioned in a letter to the editor. Jillian conventions were scheduled for the future. There was no indication the billing was gerrymandered, according to police.

"But we want to make people aware. We are averages individuals, and we are trying to do our job since the old back together," said a Chamber, the writer's note, and we want people to voice that.

MOORE SAYS SO FAR Federal Way has had no documented case of gang-related crime, although some school have called "gang-wear" among students. They know this gang members have given Federal Way police officers a problem, but small numbers don't provide a problem, Moore said.

Instead, the chamber has cut back on real estate, realtor Peter Fay, a member of the 1985 Federal Way Development Committee, said.

"It was a valid decision to hire consultants."

Burris must lead by walking away

Dick Burris, are you listening?

For anyone who has watched you over the years, it is about time you began taking direction from Federal Way. It is also clear that your passion for improving it has sometimes made you do the wrong thing.

Maybe that didn’t matter before cityhood was approved in March. It matters now, because your friends on the transition team are trying to pick the brains of a paid consultant put the city’s credibility at risk. You know this, and you know that when you pick the brains of someone else, those close to you have seen you throw your hands up at what you would consider the consultant’s outrageous proposals.

You are leading the transition team, and though you have good credentials for the role, the question of conflict of interest is a valid one. In quite of your hard work on behalf of your hometown, some of those who stood with you in wanting that new city now have doubts about you as a potential partner in it.

Whether you intend it or not, you have become a public figure. Your colorful style and your combative nature have made you memorable. That may explain the wariness among some members of the transition team that is laying groundwork for the still-undefined city council. At least four of them have resigned lately, troubled about your becoming a paid consultant in the planning process.

None of them has said you are malicious in your interest. None has attacked your intelligence or your knowledge of local zoning and planning. All of them are aware that you are a self-taught expert on these matters, and have spent two good years arguing and studying the problem of local growth, without any bias.

But now, as a public participant, you stand to gain personally from that expertise. Because they will be private funding, this is an issue the transition team leaders have dismissed. But the new city is a tender shoot. Public suspicion will hurt its chances of survival. Wouldn’t it be better for the new city if you took yourself out of the running?

None has attacked your intelligence or your knowledge of the situation, or even your ability to perform that role, but they do have reservations about your ability to agree with the city’s managers. It is a question of balance.

We wish that for him, and for the man who married him.

Healthy children apt to be healthy adults

Low-fat diets may avert heart attacks

By JACQUE DOHERTY
Saturday morning. The kids sit in front of the TV watching Saturday morning cartoons while their parents are doing the weekly cleaning. By mid-morning, most of the food staples have been put away, and the kids are starting to get restless. But it's not just the kids who are feeling the pressure.

Adults have every right to be concerned about high cholesterol levels. In 1987, almost half the adult deaths in this state were related to heart and blood diseases. One out of every four adults in the United States is estimated to have a cholesterol level of 240 milligrams per 100 milliliters or higher, and nearly half of those adults have cholesterol levels that are too high.

But children are not immune to the problem. An estimated one-third of children have high cholesterol levels. However, if cardiovascular disease usually strikes in middle age, why should children be in kids' market?

Recent studies have shown that the conditions that cause heart trouble later in life start early. "Sodium, heart disease is characterized by years of insidiousness, and then by only seconds required for the fatal event," Dr. Kenneth J. H. Cooper, the Cooper Clinic in Dallas, takes an aggressive stance in a recent book, "Coping with Cholesterol." This means that folks in this country in over to be concerned about heart disease prevention, absolutely or a family history.

Another factor doctors are just beginning to fold into the equation is the parent's cholesterol level. In this respect, the American Academy of Pediatrics states that kids with a cholesterol level of 200 milligrams per 100 milliliters or higher have a greater risk of developing heart disease than their peers.

The autopsies revealed that, even in teenagers, those with high blood-cholesterol levels and diets high in fat had cholesterol builds in their arteries. Some clues that prompt a doctor to check a child's cholesterol level are: first-degree relatives with heart trouble, obesity or a family history of heart attack or stroke. When it comes to nutrition, kids are not just smaller versions of adults. After birth, nutrition necessary after age 2 is essential for the rapid growth and development of children. Nutrition for the growing child is every bit as important as it is for adults. An estimated 40 percent of adults have cholesterol levels that are too high.

The Federal Way Baseball League

The Federal Way Big League team opened its season Saturday by splitting a doubleheader with the Kent Horizon at the Federal Way Village Field. But Federal Way fell to Inglemoor by a 5-1 score Saturday, May 20, and lost to Federal Way in the second game, 6-4. In the first game, Federal Way was led by catcher Doug Webster. He homered and had two doubles. In the second game, Federal Way was led by pitcher Pete Persons. He pitched the seventh inning and 1 2/3 innings of relief. Federal Way is 1-2 this season.

The Maverick baseball team member also played in the Federal Way baseball league. The team was led by catcher Doug Webster. He homered and had two doubles. In the second game, Federal Way was led by pitcher Pete Persons. He pitched the seventh inning and 1 2/3 innings of relief. Federal Way is 1-2 this season.

Retiring coach leads T-Bird track team to title

By CHERIE MUNOZ

Highline track coach Dee McConnaughey stepped down after a better retirement present — an Olympic gold medal for the Highline track team presented by the school to celebrate McConnaughey's 10-year tenure. The team won the overall title at the state Track and Field Meet in May.

Highline was the first team to top the Northwest Conference placement standings this season and continued to excel in the state meet.

"I just don't have time to do the things I should be doing," said McConnaughey, who also is athletic commissioner of the Northwest Conference and athletic director, an instructor and an administrator.

Two top teams knock Trojans out of tourney

If you're going to lose out of the Olympic Tournament to two of the state's best teams, at least it would be to teams which can be considered top teams. That's what the Hillsboro Central Jaguars and the Federal Way National Little League did to the Trojan-Carlton National Little League team with a pair of hard-fought victories.

The Jaguars eliminated the Trojans in the loser's bracket, 9-3, Friday evening, and then the Nationals did so with a 1-0 victory on Saturday night.

The Trojans were eliminated from the tournament in the first game of the loser's bracket final, losing 7-3 to the Jaguars.

Saturday's game went to 10 innings, with the Jaguars holding a 4-0 lead after the fifth inning. The Trojans managed to score one run in the sixth, and then another in the seventh, and the game remained scoreless through the ninth.

The Trojans scored one run in the 10th inning, but it proved to be too little against a strong Jaguar pitching staff.

The Jaguars scored four runs in the first inning, and then added three more in the fifth inning, before the Trojans scored one run in the seventh and another in the 10th.

The Jaguars scored all four of their runs in the first inning, with two runs coming on a two-out double. The Trojans then scored one run in the seventh, but the Jaguars held on to win 5-1.

The Trojans scored one run in the first inning, with another coming in the third. The Nationals scored one run in the first inning, and then added two more in the fourth. The Trojans managed to score one run in the fifth, but the Nationals held on to win 5-1.

Talk to Port of Seattle employees about their new re- structural plan, and you'll hear many distinguish whether they are talking about a nationwide cultural movement or a local corporate revolution.

"We're all excited about the new re-structure," said Van Wijk, 41, who became the new executive director of the Port of Seattle Council debates senior day care

Several members of the King County Council have come across one of the most difficult issues of the year for an adult day-care program at Seattle's Eastside Coast. The issue could come as soon as early June.

While the program is still in the conceptual stage, it could be a significant step toward the development of adult day-care facilities in King County.

The Council has been wrestling with the question of what to do about the need for adult care in the rapidly growing communities along the City of Seattle's eastern shoreline.

The issue is discussed in today's edition of the "Daily Herald," a local newspaper.

The Herald will be followed up with a more detailed report in next week's edition.

County tensions control on EIS

King County will take over the planning and supervision of some of the most complex projects in the country, including the development of the Seattle-Tacoma International Airport.

Currently, the consultants who are preparing the project's environmental impact statement are working on the first phase of the project, which will involve the development of the airport's master plan.

The consultants will be responsible for preparing the environmental impact statement for the entire project, and the county will be responsible for preparing the master plan.
